

British big guns in the public square of the ruined city of Albert. Cannon of all calibre from the small three inch to the huge nine inch are assembled here, ready for duty at the front. In the background is the towering cathedral with the hanging spire. A shell sent this into its present position early in the war, and the superstition has arisen that when it falls the conflict will end.

Copyright Underwood & Underwood.

With Pershing's men on the Lorraine front. Hauling down a sausage balloon at the approach of a German plane.

Copyright Underwood & Underwood.

Getting war photographs is a ticklish business. Here is a French picture man at work.

International Film

Howard Chandler Christy at work on a poster for the forthcoming Liberty Loan campaign. Both of the models seem to like their jobs.

Copyright Kadel & Herbert.

Here are some soldiers from New York, who posed for a picture outside their cantonment near the front in France. The third from the left in the back row is L. O'Grady, former Fordham football star. Second from the left in the middle row is John C. Donovan, former Xavier athlete. "Here's the bunch all set to go out on 'poste' for four or five days," writes one of them to a friend in New York.